

TV, Film, & Media Communications Faculty-Led Programs

Now more than ever, today's media and forms of communication are shaping our society in an increasingly multicultural and globalized world. AIFS TV, Film & Media Communications study abroad programs are week-long itineraries introducing various aspects of media communications & are an excellent complement to your curriculum. Through guest speakers, tours, workshops & visits, possible career avenues are highlighted & can be focused to specific fields as required.

International experience gives students exposure to new practices & trends all while developing a wide range of skills in high demand by today's job market, such as intercultural competence, problem solving, adaptability & creativity.

London, England

London is a fantastic destination to explore the world of international TV, film & media communications. An iconic location teeming with a rich history, diverse culture and a dynamic population. With no language barrier, it is perfect as a first experience abroad for many participants.

"AIFS has been such a great help to us providing academic resources, talent, filming locations, and coordinating general logistics, that they are truly an asset to our program and we could not do it without them."

- Michelle Carr, Documentary Film Making Faculty, Northeastern University, Mass.
